6. Touchy topics

Read the text then look at the following questions. Are they polite when you meet someone for the first time in Britain?

In Britain, when people meet each other for the first time, they talk about things like family, work, school or sports. They ask questions like 'Where do you come from?' and 'Where do you live?' These are polite questions. They are not personal or private.

But some things are personal or private, and questions about them are not polite. People don't ask questions about a person's salary. They don't ask how much someone is paid for something. It is OK to ask children how old they are, but it is not polite to ask older people their age. It is also not polite to ask people questions about politics or religion unless you know them well.

7. Read the following passage first,

Of all the children I knew at school, the one I have the fondest memories of is Reggie Bennett. His apparent gruffness made me a bit wary of him when we first met, and I thought that he was something of a rough diamond. Through his quick wit and leadership, however, he quickly gained everyone's admiration and became the school's golden boy, both in the classroom and the playground.

Perhaps the main reason for Reggie's popularity was his ability to tell great stories about ghosts and aliens. Once, being the gullible person I am, I believed him. When I realised he'd been pulling my leg I got embarrassed, but I tried to put on a brave face .

Despite all the teasing, though Reggie would never stab a friend in the back as, to him disloyalty among friends was unforgivable and it really made his hackles rise if anyone talked about him behind his back. I shall never forget the time when he found out that someone had been telling everybody, untruthfully, that he had cheated in a test: Reggie got very hot under the collar.

Apart from such occasions, however, Reggie always kept his cool and thanks to his down-to-earth character, he was always the best person to consult if you needed practical advice.

I often wonder what happened to Reggie after we left school. However, I'm certain of one thing: with a character as special as his, he deserved the best in life.

then, on the basis of the passage, mark the statements TRUE (T) or FALSE (F)
